

Culpin, Ewart & Son 1935 - ?

Ewart Culpin & Son [also known as E. Culpin & Son] originated as Culpin & Bowers, architectural practice founded in Richmond, Surrey, England in c.1918 by Ewart Gladstone Culpin (1877-1946) and Robert Steuart Bowers (1887?-1943). The partnership was dissolved in 1935 and that year, E.W. Culpin established Ewart Culpin & Son a new partnership with his son, Clifford Ewart Culpin (1904-1988). From its inception the practice specialised in town planning and housing. This developed into a wider range of commissions including schools, churches, shopping centres, banks, bus garages, leisure and health facilities, libraries, fire and police stations, magistrates courts, laboratories, and various other building types.

Notable among their projects from the 1930s was the design of Greenwich Town Hall in Greenwich, London, completed in 1939. A photograph of the committee room of Greenwich Town Hall designed by the practice is illustrated in 'Decorative Art' 1941 (p.62).

Ewart Culpin & Son was subsequently renamed Culpin Limited. Later projects by the firm have included master plan and some neighbourhood areas in the new village at Martlesham Heath; expansion of housing at Port Stanley, Falkland Islands; sheltered housing, frail elderly housing and housing for special needs with warden accommodation for various local authority and housing association clients; shared ownership and housing for rent for housing associations; rehabilitation and refurbishment of high-rise flats, some with tenants in occupation; estate master planning, layouts and house-type development for national house builders; PFI estate layout and house-type development; local authority housing estate upgrading, including an estate-wide video surveillance network. restoration and refurbishment projects include work to listed buildings and in conservation areas such as the headquarters of the Royal College of Nursing in Cavendish Square, the King's Observatory in Kew, work in the Palace of Westminster and the German Ambassador's Residence in Belgrave Square.

Rolling programmes of property inspection and planned maintenance were undertaken for Barclays Bank plc and London Transport Executive in various regions.
