

Gowans, James 1821 - 1890

James Gowans [also known as Sir James Gowans] was born in Blackness, near Falkirk, Scotland, on 1 August 1821. His father was a quarrymaster and builder, and part of his training to work in the family business attended classes at a private architectural academy run by David Bryce (1803-1876) in Edinburgh. In 1844-47 Gowans built the head office of David Rhind's Commercial Bank in Edinburgh and in 1846-49 the Edinburgh Gas Works Chimney. From 1847 until the early 1870s the firm was heavily engaged on commissions for railway companies.

In 1849 James Gowans took total control of the family business and over the next three decades was engaged on numerous architectural and civil engineering projects, mainly in Edinburgh.

Gowans was one the organisers of the Edinburgh International Exhibition of 1886 for which was knighted. He died in Edinburgh on 25 June 1890
