

Davison, Thomas Raffles 1853 - 1937

Thomas Raffles Davison was born in Stockton-on-Tees, England in July 1853 and was articled to the architect William Henry Spaul (1839-1915) in Oswestry, Shropshire. He then worked as an assistant at architectural practices in Nottingham, and in the office of Henry John Paull (1831-1888) in Manchester. He was active as an architect from the late 1870s onwards and was in partnership for a period with the architect Harold Conybeare Trimnell (1874-1958).

His architectural commissions were few and he is mainly known as an architectural and topographical illustrator. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in London and at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin. His work was also shown at the Modern Gallery in London in 1907, at the the RIBA Gallery in London in 1924, and in New York City.

Davison was a regular contributor to the architectural press, particularly to The British Architect and Northern Engineer [later The British Architect] of which he was editor from 1878 to 1916. He was also the author of several books on architectural matters.

Davison was appointed an Honorary Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects (Hon. RIBA) in 1896 in recognition of his contribution to architectural illustration. He was also an active member of the London Society which was established in 1912 to encourage public interest and participation in urban planning and transport matters in London

From 1904 he lived at "Whistler's Hollow" in Woldingham, Surrey, a house he had built for himself and where he died on 5 May 1937.

A biographical file on Thomas Raffles Davison is available at the Enquiry Desk, Royal Institute of British Architects Library, London
