Alick George Horsnell [commonly known as Alick G. Horsnell; also known as Alex Horsnell] was born in Chelmsford, Essex, England in July 1881 and was articled to Frederic Wykeham Chancellor (1865-1945) in Chelmsford. He studied at Chelmsford School of Art. At some point [dates not known] he worked as an assistant to Ernest Newton (1856-1922) in London. He attended classes at the Architectural Association Schools in London and was awarded an AA travelling studentship enabling him to make a study tour of France and Italy. Horsnell was a fine perspectivist and in this capacity was employed by Newton and by Ralph Knott (1878-1929) for whom he drew the competition-winning drawings for the County Hall building in London in 1908.

In addition to his work as an architect, Horsnell was also an etcher, mainly of architectural subjects, which he exhibited at the Royal Academy and Royal Society of Painter Etchers and Engravers in London; and at the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool.

He was elected an Associate of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers and Engravers in London (ARE) in 1912.
