

Moro, Peter, 1911 - 1998

Peter Meinhard Moro [commonly known as Peter Moro] was born in Heidelberg, Germany, on 27 May 1911. He studied architecture at the Technische Hochschule in Munich under Paul Schmitthenner (1929-31) and at the Technische Hochschule in Berlin-Charlottenburg under Heinrich Tessenow (1931-34). When the National Socialists came to power, Moro was ordered to leave the Hochschule because of his Jewish ancestry. He completed his architectural studies at the Eidgenössische Technische Hochschule (ETH) in Zürich under Otto R. Salvisberg.

On graduating in 1936, Moro moved to London, and soon obtained a position with Berthold Lubetkin's firm Tecton, working on the 'Highpoint II' project. He also designed the entrance screen for the MARS Group exhibition at the New Burlington Galleries in London in 1938. Later that year he formed a partnership with Richard Llewelyn-Davies (1912-1981) to design Harbour Meadow in Birdham, Sussex. In 1939 he became an executive member of the committee of the MARS. Modern Architectural Research Group.

Following the outbreak of World War Two Moro was interned first in Huyton, Liverpool, and then at Douglas on the Isle of Man, where a fellow internee was architectural historian Niklaus Pevsner. Following his release in 1941, Moro obtained a teaching post in the School of Architecture at Regent Street Polytechnic in London where he remained until 1947. During the latter half of World War Two he also worked with the designer Robin Day at the Ministry of Information.

In 1948 he was asked to join a team to design the Royal Festival Hall for London's South Bank. Moro chose a number of his best students to work with him on the project. In 1952, a year after the completion of the Royal Festival Hall, Moro co-founded the architectural firm Peter Moro & Partners (PM&P). The firm established a reputation for its work in the field of theatre architecture. The PM&P partnership was dissolved in 1984.

Peter Moro was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects (FRIBA) in 1948. He died in London on 10 October 1998.
