

Woodyer, Henry 1816 - 1896

Henry Woodyer was born in Guildford, Surrey, England in 1816. After studying Merton College, Oxford from 1835 to 1838, he briefly worked in the office of William Butterfield (1814-1900) in London. In the early 1840s he set up his own architectural practice at 4 Adam Street in London. He also had an office the High street, Guildford. By the mid-1840s he had begun designing churches and it is as a church architect that he is primarily known.

Woodyer was an avowed Anglican and an exponent of the Gothic Revival style which informed much of his work as an architect.

Woodyer married in 1851 and the following year his wife died in childbirth. Not long after, he moved with his infant daughter, Hester Fanny, to Grafham Grange near Dunsfold in Surrey where he lived for over 30 years. By 1891 he had moved to Bramley in Surrey. He died at his home, Padworth Croft, near Reading, Berkshire on 10 August 1896
