James Alfred Henry Harper [commonly known as J. Alfred Harper and as J. Alfd Harper] was born in Aston, Warwickshire, England on 11 January 1866. He trained as an architect in the practice of his brother Ewen Harper (1853-1920) in Birmingham. He also attended Birmingham School of Art where he won a number of prizes.

In 1897 he formed a partnership with his brother, Ewen Harper (1853-1920) as Ewen & J. Alfred Harper [also known as Ewen Harper, Brother & Co.] in Birmingham.

The Harper brothers were fervent Methodists and in addition to designing a wide range of commercial, industrial, public and domestic buildings, were responsible for designing a large number of non-conformist churches. Most of the practice's work was in the Birmingham area. Notable among their projects was the Methodist Central Hall in Birmingham in 1900-03.

Ewen Harper died in 1920. The year before, he had retired and his son, Leonard Ewen Harper (1886-1954) had joined the practice which continued as Ewen Harper, Brother & Co.

The dissolution of the partnership was announced in The London Gazette, 5 October 1937 p.6177 and it was stated that "Leonard Ewen Harper F.R.I.B.A. will continue to practise for commercial and other work under the old firm name of 'Ewen Harper Brother & Co.' at Ruskin Chambers 191 Corporation Street Birmingham as heretofore, who will shortly take into partnership his Sons Bernard Ivan Harper and Dennis Rosslyn Harper. James Alfred Henry Harper (the Senior Partner in the old firm) and his Son Walter Geoffrey Harper will continue to practice from the 30th September at Union Chambers, Temple Row, Birmingham under the style of 'J. Alfred Harper & Son.'"

James Alfred Henry Harper died in Birmingham on 24 December 1952.
