

Pearson, John Loughborough 1817 - 1897

John Loughborough Pearson was born in Brussels, Belgium on 15 July 1817 and was the son William Pearson, an artist. In c.1831 he moved to Durham, England where he trained as an architect with Ignatius Bonomi (1787-1870) from 1831 to 1841. After working briefly as an assistant to George Pickering, he went to London where he was employed as an assistant in the offices of Anthony Salvin (1799-1881) and Philip Hardwick (1792-1870), he established his own practice in London in 1843, specialising almost exclusively on the design and restoration of churches.

In 1870 Pearson was appointed architect to Lincoln Cathedral. He was also Diocesan architect for Rochester, Bristol and Peterborough.

From 1890 to 1897 he was in partnership with his son, Frank Loughborough Pearson (1864-1947).

He registered with the newly founded Institute of British Architects [subsequently Royal Institute of British Architects] in 1834 but was not elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects (FRIBA) until 1860. He was awarded the RIBA Queen's Gold Medal in 1880. He was also elected a Royal Academician (RA) in 1880. Pearson died at his home, 13 Mansfield Street, Marylebone, London, on 11 December 1897. Following his death much of his unfinished work was completed by Frank Loughborough Pearson.
