

Chamberlain, John Henry 1831 - 1883

John Henry Chamberlain was born in Leicester, Leicestershire, England on 26 June 1831 and was articled to Henry Goddard (1792-1868) in Leicester. After completing his articles he received additional training in a London office. In 1853 he was awarded the RIBA Silver Medal for an essay on polychromy in architecture. After a study tour of Italy he returned to Britain and settled in Birmingham where he set up in practice in c.1855. Soon after, he formed a partnership with William Harris, however, this was short-lived and he returned to working independently.

In 1864 he formed a new partnership with William Hippisley Martin (1828-1900) as Martin & Chamberlain. The practice is particularly known for Highbury Hall, the house they designed for the Liberal politician Joseph Chamberlain in 1876 and for the 32 schools they designed for the Birmingham School Board in the 1870s and 1880s.

Chamberlain was for some years Professor of Architecture at Queen's College, Birmingham. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects (FRIBA) in 1861, and was personally chosen by John Ruskin as one of the Trustees of his Guild of St George. In addition to his work as an architect, Chamberlain also designed stained glass, metalwork in iron and brass, and domestic furniture. He died at 7 The Crescent, Birmingham on 22 October 1883
